Words A. Goin-Lynch

Over a decade ago I thought I was a poet, what a good laugh I have had at my own expense, however it was the sincerity behind the actions that still has me in awe of myself. It was these first words, perhaps the most important words, which have set me on my course. And honestly, reading them makes me sick to my stomach. I can remember writing every one of them, I remember every heartache, every pain. I do not know why no one noticed, why no one tried to help. But that is what I am now doing, helping myself, in some demented, self-sacrificing way. There is much that I do not understand, and even more that I will never understand. Nonetheless, it is now time to expose my lies, pull of my masks and face down my demons. I am not longer content being chained to these words, thoughts and feelings. I am not afraid of who I am. I am no longer afraid of these words, of my past.
