Introduction to the Week of Months Series

As I spent time with God each day over a period of months, it transformed my understanding of the reality of God through experience. Being older, God and I go back a ways. While my ability to stay focused has been challenged, God as always has stayed the course of being a loving Father. And there have been numerous miracles. When I started my family lived in a one room efficiency apartment. Today we have a house in the country on three acres we are buying, paying little more than for that apartment! My daughter was deathly allergic to peanuts. Suddenly, that was gone, and now her favorite sandwich is peanut butter and jelly. While this may not sound like much to us adults, it was a big deal to a 10 year old. And the list goes on. Please do not take this wrong and think that somehow by some formula you will be able to get God to move on your behalf. The point is He already is and wants to be, and if we can connect and plug in to what He is doing, then we experience life as God meant it to be, based on an opportunity to walk down that path with me. God has a pattern to His creation we can discover in our walk with Him.

Introduction to Daily Devotional: Comfort

I recorded a portion of what occurred on my daily devotional journey, and that is the book you are now reading. This book is the first book in the series, "Week of Months", and was written over that period of months by spending time with God each day. Each day had a different theme to it. Having previously written "Daily Devotional: Heart of the Nation" from prayers and visions I had experienced, it occurred to me that others may benefit from having a pattern of daily prayer to follow.

When I think of the subject of Comfort, it makes me think of the challenges I face today, or from the past. Something either has happened or is happening that creates that little hollow feeling inside. At times it is bigger. What singles the need for Comfort out to me is that that inner need is based on one or more events that left me with some feeling of something missing. In all cases I have encountered, that need for me is best met first by God. He truly cares for us and wants to fill that need, provide that healing or missing piece, and help us to know He is there for us and has things under control.

The image on the front of this really hit home to me. Here we have a picture of the Military Sealift Command hospital ship USNS Comfort coming to the rescue. (They were on a humanitarian mission and the photo was taken by Senior Airman Kasey Close. We want to acknowledge every one of the military involved in this mission for the work they were doing.) Imagine yourself as the man with the little boy walking out into the water and seeing that tremendous amount of aid coming your way. Imagine the relief, the feeling of Comfort at that moment. It is truly hard for me to imagine it, and yet when I saw the picture, it reminded me of God coming to my rescue to provide me Comfort. I know He is even bigger than that, but the image really helped me to visually get the feeling of God on His way. I hope both the image and these pages do the same for you.

To God be the glory!
