The Great Powers, after three long years of war, reached a stalemate. After millions had spilled their blood, no end appeared in sight. Or so the world believed before August 1916. That one month changed the world forever, no more so than in North America. For fifty years, the United States and Confederate States shared the continent and an animosity that would not die. With three million dead between the two of them and the C.S.A. on the verge of collapse, Confederate soldiers and politicians began to consider the unthinkable; surrender to the Yankee.
