A 1400 word essay examining the problems with government picking winners and losers in the economy.

A pattern of unintentional negative consequences is hardly a new phenomenon. It happens whenever government steps beyond the proper bounds of its mission. When taxpayers must pick up the tab for losses, not only are creativity and accountability blunted, private solutions that might better address the concerns of business never come to fruition.

A project that is not economically justified for private business to implement should not be done until such time as conditions are conducive to its fulfillment. Whether constructing a transcontinental railroad, spreading rural electrification, or racing to the moon, diverting wealth through coercion is never ethically or economically permissible.

It's just as true now as it has ever been that when someone knocks on your door and says, "Hi. I'm from the government, and I'm here to help," the best course to follow is to slam shut that door and run for your life.
